

Construction

Overview

Liskow & Lewis has handled a broad range of matters in the areas of industrial, commercial, and maritime construction law, including transactional matters and litigation. Our lawyers draft and negotiate contracts for commercial buildings, offshore platforms and pipelines and large residential construction projects for a broad range of clients.

Following natural disasters such as Hurricanes Katrina and Rita or other catastrophic incidents, our construction law team can provide comprehensive assistance to builders, owners and lenders in addressing and resolving implicit issues. This includes litigation with respect to the cause of structure failure and construction and architectural contracts for repairs to or rebuilding of damaged property.

In addition, we represent numerous entities in the energy and health care fields in disputes in both litigation and arbitration over industrial, marine, and commercial construction. We assist clients with vessel construction claims, disputes involving architects' and engineers' liability and construction contracts involving commercial, industrial and offshore construction projects.

Our firm also routinely handles construction delays and disputes, issues of faulty or defective construction, mold damage and insurance coverage involving construction claims.
