Practice Prevention, But Plan Your Response

Treat Criminal Prosecution Like Any Other Marine Casualty

Presented by Dee Taylor and Ray Waid

Companies are often unprepared for the federal investigation and prosecution of environmental crimes, resulting in losses above and beyond the criminal fine.

We will provide an overview of the lifecycle of a marine pollution investigation and prosecution, and highlight practical steps that a company can take to reduce both defense costs and potential penalties. We will also demonstrate how a small investment in education, training, and planning can reduce a company's exposure during a high-pressure federal investigation.

Dee Taylor is a former federal prosecutor with more than 21 years of experience prosecuting federal crimes in New Orleans, Louisiana, including working directly with the Eighth Coast Guard District Legal Office on more than 40 APPS and Clean Water Act investigations and prosecutions.
